Brookfield's commercial investment footprint in Texas

Brookfield, a Canadian company and leading global asset manager, is one of the largest commercial investors in Texas, with operations spanning data centers, office towers, residential communities, distribution centers, retail properties, and energy infrastructure. With a focus on long-term, large-scale investments, Brookfield plays a key role in driving economic growth and strengthening critical industries.

As Texas emerges as a data center hub, Brookfield's Compass operates two hyperscale campuses in Dallas-Fort Worth, supporting 670 megawatts of contracted capacity. The company is also a key player in natural gas, with a stake in Cheniere Energy, which exports LNG from terminals in Sabine Pass and Corpus Christi.

The expanding presence of Brookfield in Texas is more than just a business venture—it symbolizes the deepening relationship between Canada and one of the U.S.'s most influential states. From sustainable energy projects to transformative real estate developments, Brookfield is playing a pivotal role in Texas' continued growth and success.

Providing technology for carbon capture

1PointFive is a joint venture between Texas-based Occidental Petroleum and Canada-based Carbon Engineering, currently building out facilities to pull carbon dioxide from the air and store the gas underground to support the carbon reduction targets of the airline industry.

Occidental eventually wants to sell “net-zero oil”, which would involve energy customers paying for machines that suck carbon dioxide from the air. Direct-air-capture technology does not exist at scale and removing carbon dioxide in this manner is currently much more expensive than forestry. However, it holds the promise of locking up carbon more reliably and for far longer.
