Washington supports B.C. wine industry after devastating freeze

After the 2024 winter deep freeze severely damaged British Columbia's vineyards, Washington's grape growers, government, and industry partners responded by facilitating the export of ripe grapes to B.C. wineries. This timely support helped sustain wine production, preserving jobs and stabilizing the region's tourism and hospitality economy.

These Washington-sourced grapes are now being crafted into B.C. wines, set to hit shelves from April 2025 to March 2028. This cross-border partnership underscores the resilience of the Canada-Washington trade relationship, ensuring that B.C.'s renowned wine industry continues to thrive.
